How The Festival Got Its Name . . .

From the signal tower high atop the Navesink Highlands, that stood 250 feet over the treacherous entrance to New York Harbor at Sandy Hook, the watcher stared out in disbelief. On the horizon he spotted what could only be a heavily sparred ship. The anxious watcher focused in his telescope at the rapidly approaching tea clipper flying clouds of canvas that could only be the Sea Witch, scudding up the New Jersey coast. Her sleek black hull slicing through the choppy swells with the crew at last taking in her sails one after the other and running up her private signal. It was March 25, 1849 and there were no tea clippers due for another two weeks, but there was no denying that there was the Sea Witch back from her third voyage around the world. Robert Waterman had come romping back from China to New York in 74 days, 14 hours and beaten the tea fleet home. The waterfront was soon buzzing with the news. Within hours a pilot had come aboard the Sea Witch and guided the sleek black tea clipper to her moorings at the South Street wharf. The firm of Howland and Aspinwall would make a fortune at the tea auction and bask in the glory of a new record for the China to New York run. Again William Aspinwall's hunches and daring had paid off in a big way. With profits more than enough to pay for the building of another clipper. New York City went wild with the news of this latest recordbreaking run. The Commercial Advertiser wrote: "The splendid ship Sea Witch, Capt. Waterman, arrived here on Sunday in seventy-five days from China, having performed a voyage around the world in 194 sailing days. During the voyage she has made the shortest direct passages on record: 69 days from New York to Valparaiso; 50 days from Callao to China; 75 days from China to New York. Distance run by observation from New York to Valparaiso, 10,568 miles; average 6 2/5 miles per hour. Distance from Callao to China, 10,417 miles; average, 8 5/8 knots per hour. Distance from China to New York, 14,225 miles; average, 7 7/8 knots per hour. Best ten (consecutive) days' run, 2,634 miles; 11 1/10 knots per hour. "Waterman later wrote: "The model of the Sea Witch had more influence upon the subsequent configuration of fast vessels than any other ship ever built in the United States."
